

Jack Cleland

Former Chief Compliance Officer, Corning Incorporated

Jack served as the Chief Compliance Officer of Corning from 2006 until his retirement from Corning in 2017. In that role, in the U.S. and many other countries, he set up training programs and other processes and standards, and led multiple internal investigations and responses to government investigations. Simultaneously, Jack also had responsibility for all litigation and all international legal matters for Corning, and negotiated many domestic and international M&A transactions. He also served as a director of Pittsburgh Corning Corp. Before joining Corning, Jack was an associate at the Arnold & Porter law firm and, prior to law school, was an Army officer. Jack graduated from the U.S. Military Academy, from the Army's Airborne and Ranger schools, and from Harvard Law School (magna cum laude).

