Dr. Saylor,

Words cannot express how much we have appreciated the on-going support from The Citadel. It was truly an honor to have 70 cadets among other Citadel faculty and staff present at our 2015 Race for the Cure. Our survivors, along with other participants, could not stop talking about how respectful and helpful the cadet volunteers were during the race. From handling the race course and clean-up to giving the survivors a high-five as they crossed the finish line, every task was completed and done with enthusiasm.

Commitment from volunteers like the cadets, allow us to strengthen our programs, develop new ones and increase public awareness of our services and our mission. We acknowledge the mass attendance our event received from your campus has been difficult to achieve in the past and, as a result, it became a priceless moment for our 2015 race participants. Alone, your actions are noble and meaningful, but the collaborative efforts create an unstoppable force in the fight against breast cancer.

Events such as our Race for the Cure help to fund our community grant programs which provided breast cancer screenings, diagnostic and treatment support services and education to the medically underserved in our 17-county area. Your generous support is fundamental to the continuation of this lifesaving work as it will further our promise to save lives and end breast cancer forever by empowering people, ensuring quality care for all, and energizing science to find the cures. We look with hope to a day without breast cancer and we thank you for taking a part in our journey year after year.

Sincerely,
